Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: . . . coal-carts, and furniture-vans it could find--for I was in a frantic hurry! I sat on the extreme edge of the seat--I drew in more breath than my body could conveniently hold, in order to lighten myself. I even tried to will the beast into a trot. But, what was the good Had it not observed my manner at Victoria Station Did it not suspect There was one thing, however, about that drive to which I shall ever look back with a grateful heart: the cabman did not assess the damages by the flight of time! I thought you were never coming, were the words with which Miss Gilbert, looking dangerously charming in the soft light reflected from her pink cross-over blouse, greeted me. Look out of window at that cab horse, Miss Gilbert, and youll wonder I am here at all. But it seems to me to be a remarkably good cab horse: see how quickly it is trotting off. Thats just it, Miss Gilbert: if it had come like that, it wouldnt be going like that! I ask you to regard its present activity as fair reason for excusing my lateness. Do you think you can Certainly, Mr. Call Boy, if its only to save time. I must be off to a rehearsal in a few minutes. We will get to business at once, then. . . . Im quite ready now to make a note of everything you have to say for yourself. I...
