Among these institutions is the American Library Association. This association maintains a branch library at Great Lakes Naval Training Station and although it has been open but a short time, it has become one of the popular institutions of the station. Here the men go to read when they arc off duty, finding on the shelves, which contain more than 11,000 books, reading matter of whatever description they desire. Fiction--there are books of this class a-plenty. They are of the popular and standard variety and are the kind of books that redblooded young men like to read. Technical...
